MALLEABLE GLASS. One of the lost arts, which skill and science have for hundreds of years been making efforts to rediscover, is the production of mulleable glass. It was mentioned by many ancient writers, especially by Pliny, who speaks of its being indented when thrown on a hard sub stance and then hammered into shape again like brass. The world uses a vastly greater amount of glass now than during the earlier nges, but has never been able to overcome its brittleness. That a complished, and it would enter into uses not even suspected now, and probably dispute with iron itself for supremacy us an agent of civilization. A glass-spincer in Vienna has recently made a discovery that may lend to the recovery of the lost link in the chain of early invention. He is manfacturing a thread of this material, finer than a silk-worm's fibre, which is entering largely into the manufacture of a variety of new fabrics, such as cushions, carpets, tablecloths, shawls neckties, figures in brocaded velvet and silk, embreidery, tapestry, laces and a multitude of other things. It is as soft as the finest wool, stronger than silk thread, and is not changed by heat, light, moisture or acids, not liable to fade. So important is the matter deemed that, while the process is kept a profound secret, the Austrian Minister of Commerce has already organized schools for glass spinning in various places in Bohemia, and variety of manufactured articles are now for sale, and will no doubt soon reach America. It it shall end in the final rediscovery of malleable glass, so that it can be wrought or rolled into sheets, it will revolutionise much of the world's industry. Indeed, no one could safely predict to what uses it might not be applied, as the material is plentiful in all lands. Mankind have long waited for it. Let us hope the time is near when so great a boon will be voucheafed thing: It is of course natural and necessary in the interests of science that professional lic and the professional men who read them are not gratifying a morbid and importment curiosity in studying the minutest particulars of disease. Whether the medical journals should be in such violent baste to print their secrets is mother question. Science would hardly suffer even if the disclosures were postponed until the subject of them had been committed to the tomb. For the publication of such articles in a journal intended for general, and especially for family, circulation up excuse can be alloged. It cannot be pretended that it is done in the interests of science, for the multitude is not scientific. It is impossible to doubt that prominence and publicity are given to these painful and disgusting details purely for the sake of pandering to a prurient and vicious -cariosity. Unfortunitely there are people who like to pry into librrible things, and to gloat were the awful secrets of disease and death. For our own part, we do not believe that journals which deliberately set themselves to fester and gratify these vile and morbid appetites are. really serving their own personal interests, They disgust and sicken more people than they outraged by this loud and shameless traffic in the sad mysteries of the sick-room, the agonies of the dying, and the fresh overwhelming sorrow of the bereazed family, the widow's serrow, and the orphan's tears. There is something mexpressibly revolting in this prying and

All this might have been told without any rank of Queen's Counsel, and it is not desirable violation of decency or decorum, . . .

Indeed, the case and its attendant circumstances seem to Or London .have gradually ceased to occupy-public attention. Since the day of Michael DeGa's release, it has gradually declined from that foremost position amongst conversational topics which up till that period it occupied; and persons are not wenting who affirm, that his arrest, made ostensibly on suspicion, was but a sop to public opinion, which demanded that somebody, it did not care much who, should be taken into custody, so that it might have something to Fest on, and somebody to speculate about. On Shangual .-Subsequent events proved that the police were unable to produce any evidence which tended to throw more than a suspicion on Michael DeGa, and he was at once dubbed guilty by those who pretended to know something more of the case than had been had before the public. A local contemporary went to the extent of devoting a column, to prove, on the evidence on which the coroner's jury had found themselves unable to return anything beyond an open verdict, that the man released from custody was the poisoner. The enquiring public finding that prop to the theory which it had constructed knocked away, turned to the other support-the police. Firm was the reliance placed by everybody on the detective abilities of the Khan Bahadoor, and his two assistants Abdool and Ahmed Ally; and it was known the enquiry into the case was personally conducted by the acting Deputy Commissioner, and the best European detective officer which Bombay possesses, Superintendent Mills. Yet, it may fairly be inferred that, for the sake of their own reputation, of which detectives, the Bombay thie catchers at any some means of satisfying the public mind as to their proceedings, were their efforts at all promising. The missing link, since the commencement, has been the absence of any clue to the mun who conveyed the cakes to the house in Grant Road. On his discovery the police rest their hopes of bringing the poisoner to justice; so until he is found it seems there is but small chance of any satisfactory termination to their enquiry. The popular belief is that the man who conveyed the cakes to the Grant Road house was none other than the poisoner in disguise, and mee to local trader. some portions of the evidence taken at the inquest afford very fair ground for basing this sup- | Hop-hing to Macao merchant position upon. It is not probable, that any observations which we might offer could affect the result of the petition which has been presented by Mr. Edwin James to the Common Law Judges by way of appeal from the decision of the Benchers of the Inner Temple. But it is not to be concealed that Mr. Edwin James profess very grave charges against the body who acted as a TTAVE just feccived, ex French Mail, court of inquiry and disbarred him. He does not allege merely that they formed an inaccurate opinion, and arrived at a wrong conclusion, but he says that his judges were his accusers, erfength; whether the doctors were hopeful, altogether the fault of Mr. James. PROOF OF TELEGRAPHIC MESSAGES

A member of the Northern Circuit has pointed out, in a letter to the Times, the difficuly of proving contracts within the Statute of Frauds, where the party sought to be bound has sent his message by telegraph. He states that at the end of six months the originals of telegraphic despatches are destroyed, in accordance with the routine of the department; and that, unless the dispute between sender and receiver has ripened within that time, the plaintiff is pretty sure not to have accured the original memorandum signed by the defendant or his agent, before its destruction at the Post Office. Now, Mr. Lascelles proposes that after the expiration of some such fixed term as the Post Office may deem necessary for the purposes of comparison, &c., the originals shall be owarded to the persons to whom they are addressed upon the request of such persons provided such request be made within a fixed period-say of six months. This seems a valu able suggestion, but we are rather inclined to think that the original of every telegraphic despatch ought to be forwarded to the party addressed at the earliest date consistent with the arrangements of the Post Office. Of course this plan would entail some additional cost on he Post Office; but the senders should be compelled to fold the messages, and deliver them in open addressed envelopes to the operator. This scheme would be productive of good in three ways. First, an error in the telegraphic message would be corrected by the despatch itself, and in many cases the mischief likely to arise from the error might be averted. Second the receiver of the message and original despatch would always be able to adduce proof to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, assuming the memorandum itself to be sufficient. Third, a please. Good feeling as well as good taste is more effective stop would be put on, false, supposititions, and libellous messages; because the party addressed would at once be put in possession of the manuscript of the actual sender. At the present price of inland messages, we, Law Journal, should think that the depurt ment ought not to begrudge the public every reasonable help in the transactions of business, | . PORTER. even at the risk of some additional expense in the employment of folders and the extra bulk.
